In English tense means time. There are three types of tension called past, present and future tense. Every tension belongs to the verb, so we can say that the tense definition as tense is a sentence that tells of the time that passes, to continue and will happen in the future. In this situation we can also say that the verb is known as the verb of action too. These three types of intensity have four additional types, indefinite, continuous, perfect and perfect continuous times. where continuous means an action that continues. Perfect means a task done in the top three times. Perfect continuous means an action done at a certain time but here the first guys say the beginning of an action. In English there are three types of verb that are present, past and past participle. A formula called fourth types where we put ing in the first form of the verb, for example it is going to go, do to do and so on. The form ing is called this participle as well. These four formats are used in all types of sects and sentences. It is necessary to memorize all three basic forms of verbs so that we can use them in our English language. However, in many descriptions of languages, especially in traditional European grammar, the term tense applies to series of rhetoric or constructions that express not only a place in time, but also additional qualities of the state or action - particularly aspectual or tropical properties. The category of aspect expresses how a state or an action relates to time - whether it is seen as a complete event, an ongoing or recurring situation, etc. Many languages distinguish between the perfect aspect (indicating the full facts) and the imperfect aspect (indicating current or recurring situations) some also have other aspects, such as a perfect aspect, indicating a situation after a previous event. Some of the traditional times express the temporal reference along with the aspectual information. In Latin and French, for example, the imperfect denotes the previous year in conjunction with the imperfect aspect, while other forms of verbs (the Latin perfect, and the French passé composé or passé simple) are used to refer to past time with perfect aspect.
